Business Continuation Information:

- Please affix this supplementary form to the instruction and tick the appropriate box on front page.
- If you own a business, you may wish to consider the addition of a Business Continuation Clause in your Will(s). However, you will only need to take this action if your business would not be able to continue in the event of your death. This usually applies to Sole Proprietors who are the day-to-day managers of their own business. The Business Continuation Clause allows your appointed Business Executor(s) to continue the business as normal, pay staff, pay suppliers and generally maintain the value of the business until your estate is settled. Without such clauses, no one would have full rights to continue the business. Limited company directors do not normally need such clauses unless no other director would be able to run the business. A Partnership should have a Partnership Agreement in force.
- You may also consider a separate Business Power of Attorney so that in the event of your incapacity, someone with the required expertise could maintain your business until a long-term solution is established.
